in kitchens with its uniform assembly of cabinets and functional interior fittings. This commitment to innovation continued in 1950 with the introduction of the first fitted kitchen at the Cologne Furniture Fair, evolving into the extensive built-in kitchen program “form 2000” by 1962.

Poggenpohl’s legacy is not just one of exceptional quality but also of design inspiration. The company’s craftsmanship shone through in the world-famous Ten-Layer Lacquer technique of the 1930s, enabling high-gloss lacquer surfaces. This dedication to innovation persisted, as seen in the introduction of the first solid wood kitchen in 1968, which sparked a trend for wooden kitchens in the 1970s.

Looking towards the future, Poggenpohl’s commitment to innovation remains unwavering. The “Experiment 70” study by designer Luigi Colani in 1970 envisioned a futuristic concept for the year 2000 with the blue sphere kitchen, showcasing Poggenpohl’s innovative thinking and dedication to pushing boundaries.

In the 21st century, Poggenpohl continues to lead the way with design concepts like “+SEGMENTO,” a modular design that has become a timeless classic. The company’s collaboration with renowned designers has resulted in iconic lines such as “+MODO” by Jorge Pensi and “+VENOVO,” a design line focusing on standalone furniture for flexible use in various living situations.

Poggenpohl places the kitchen at the heart of communal living, viewing it as the most important space for character, energy, and enjoyment. Each kitchen is meticulously designed, blending exciting proportions, high-quality materials, and inspiring colors to create contemporary masterpieces that enrich the surrounding architecture in a truly distinctive manner.
